Self-Introduction

My name is Samantha Brummell and I am licensed specialist clinical social worker (LCSW). I have years of experience in helping individuals who suffer with chronic pain, terminal illnesses and other health-related concerns. I have devoted my career to developing my specialization in therapeutic services for people who are diagnosed with cancer, in remission or struggling with other terminal illnesses. Sam works with individuals (adults and seniors 65+), couples and families providing treatment with a primary focus on cognitive behavioral interventions to help her clients live a meaningful life. Sam recognizes that to live life often means we are all impacted by trauma; she is currently pursuing her certification in Brainspotting (BSP). Where you look affects how you feel (David Grand, PhD), meaning, that our brain activity organizes itself around our eye position and BSP is a therapeutic technique designed to reprocess traumas. BSP is a fast-growing therapeutic tool that has proven to be beneficial to peoples around the world in working through trauma experiences. In addition to her work with depression, anxiety and trauma, Sam has focused her professional career in working with individuals who are suffering from chronic pain, terminal illness and aging concerns. She offers a uniquely empathetic and compassionate therapeutic relationship which allows for her clients to heal, grow and begin living life again. She is trained in Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), Dialectical Behavior Therapy (DBT) Solution-Focused Behavioral Therapy (SFBT) and Mindfulness techniques.
